John Calvin, Institutes (1541) Ch. 17 – "The Christian Life"

1. Calvin says that, in order to be encouraged to meditate on the life to come, a Christian must learn to have contempt for the present life, but not so much that it produces hatred of it or ingratitude toward God.

   True or False

John Owen, Spiritual Mindedness, Chs. 1,2

2. John Owen says that, the real truth of a Christian's spiritual mindedness is seen in their voluntary thoughts—those that are unforced and natural—when the mind is free to think as it pleases.

   True or False

Gilbert Meilander, "The Everyday C.S. Lewis"

3. Meilander believes that C.S. Lewis would agree with him when he asserts that, "Lewis' writing is 'religious' rather than 'theological'"

   True False

4. Meilander argues that Lewis had a keen delight in the ordinary and the everyday, not only for themselves, but rather because in them he believed:
   a. We find our callings
   b. Our character is formed
   c. Eternal issues are determined
   d. All of the above

5. Furthermore, Meilander illustrates that Lewis in his writings did not hesitate to emphasize the appropriateness and the necessity of suffering in the ordinary and the every day. In fact, he says that if there is one biblical theme that pervades his works it surely is this:
   a. The one who loses his life for Jesus' sake will find it

b. An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth
c. Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you
d. None of the above

6. Meilandar concludes that there are very few indeed who have managed as well as Lewis to invoke in readers both an appreciation for and a delight in our created life, and a sense of the pain and anguish that come when that life is fully redirected to the One from whom it comes.

True False

Calvin, Institutes 3.19

7. For Calvin a proper understanding of the power of Christian freedom is so crucial he refers to it as an appendage of justification.

True False

8. Calvin explains that true freedom of conscience is to obey without compulsion as expressed in which biblical analogy:
   a. The constraints of the yoke of the law
   b. The servant under a burdensome taskmaster
   c. An accepted son of a gracious father
   d. None of the above

9. Which of the following is NOT asserted by Calvin under the discussion of "things indifferent":
   a. Believers should not be in doubt, but free of conscience
   b. We should use God's gifts for the purpose for which he gave them with no scruple of conscience
   c. Our freedom must rightly guard the conscience of the stronger brother
   d. We should use our freedom if it results in the edification of our neighbor, but if it does not help our neighbor, we should forgo it

10. Calvin explains that man is under a twofold government, the one spiritual and the other political, two worlds with two different kings. His main concern here is for the place of conscience, the tribunal of the heart. For Calvin this conscience is ultimately under the realm of which kingdom? (Hint: "My conscience is subject to the observance of this law, even if no man lived on the earth.")
    a. The spiritual kingdom
    b. The political kingdom
    c. a and b
    d. None of the above

Calvin Van Reken, "Christians in the World: Pilgrims or Settlers?"

11. Van Reken argues that in the last fifty years there has been a significant shift in the Christian Reformed Church, particularly in its vision of how believers should consider and engage the world. He demonstrates this by looking at changes over this period in that denomination's:
    a. Hymns and spiritual songs
    b. Mission statements and church vows
    c. Preaching and scholarship
    d. All of the above

12. According to Van Reken which of the following is a consequence of this "new vision" in the CRC?
    a. Worldliness
    b. Diminished interest in personal evangelism
    c. Recognition of the transient nature of this life
    d. a and b

13. In analyzing the problem of the "new vision," Van Reken cautions the efforts of Christians in transforming culture. He supports his case by citing this WSC professor:
    a. Scott Clark
    b. Ryan Glomsrud
    c. Michael Horton
    d. David VanDrunen

14. Van Reken concludes that if the church loses the "old vision," she is in danger of forgetting what is really most important; namely, that we are pilgrims on the way home.

    True False

Richard Gaffin, "Theonomy and Eschatology"

15. In Gaffin's judgment, what is the historic Protestant view of the millennium, as expressed in the creeds of the Reformation period including the Westminster Standards (though not know in those days under this name):
    a. Amillennialism
    b. Premillennialism
    c. Postmillennialism
    d. None of the above

16. Gaffin argues that the eschatology taught in the New Testament is a realized-eschatology and therefore a decidedly optimistic amillennialism, optimistic about the victory—present (and past) no less than future—being realized in and through the church.

    True False

17. According to Gaffin, nothing is more fundamental to the identity of the church between Christ's first and second coming then:
    a. Sharing in his glory
    b. Participating in a golden age
    c. Suffering with Christ
    d. Her exaltation

18. Gaffin closes his remarks by looking to the book of Hebrews to make his case that the church is a:
    a. Pilgrim congregation
    b. People in the wilderness
    c. Church not yet at rest
    d. All of the above
